Abstract

This paper aims to explore the impact of emerging technologies on communication in Tanzania. As advancements in technology continue to reshape the global landscape, it is crucial to examine how these changes are affecting communication practices in specific contexts. This study focuses on Tanzania, a country with a unique socio-cultural setting and a growing reliance on digital technologies. By analyzing the current state of communication in Tanzania and investigating the adoption and usage of emerging technologies, this paper seeks to provide insights into the opportunities and challenges that arise from this dynamic interplay.
