

Comparative Analysis of the Legal Treatment of the Compulsory Portion of Inheritance Across Former Yugoslav Territories: Montenegro, Slovenia, Croatia, Serbia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and North Macedonia

Xhemile Saliu

Assistant Prof. Dr: International Balkan University Faculty of Law, Skopje- North Macedonia

Abstract

This comprehensive comparative analysis delves into the nuanced legal treatment of the compulsory portion of inheritance across a range of former Yugoslav territories, specifically Montenegro, Slovenia, Croatia, Serbia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and North Macedonia.

The study scrutinizes the intricacies of inheritance laws within each jurisdiction, focusing on the rights and obligations of heirs and testators in relation to the indispensable part of inheritance.

Through this in-depth examination, the research aims to illuminate both the commonalities and divergences in legal frameworks, shedding light on the historical, cultural, and legal influences that have shaped inheritance laws in these regions.

By providing a detailed exploration of these legal nuances, this study offers valuable insights into the inheritance practices and legal traditions of these former Yugoslav countries, serving as a resource for legal scholars, practitioners, and policymakers seeking a deeper understanding of this complex area of law.

Keywords: Inheritance, compulsory portion, comparative analysis, former Yugoslav territories, inheritance laws within each jurisdiction.