

Exploring the Influence of Social Diversity, Cultural Values, Religious Beliefs, Media, And Political Institutions on Democratic Political Culture

Suporn Bundith¹, Dr. Waiphot Kulachai¹, Junphen Wannarak²

¹ College of Politics and Government, Suan Sunandha Rajabhat University, Bangkok, Thailand

² Faculty of Business Administration and Information Technology
Rajamangala University of Technology Suvarnabhumi, Suphan Buri, Thailand

Abstract

This research explores the multifaceted nature of democratic political culture, focusing on the interconnected influences of social diversity, cultural values, religious beliefs, media representation, and the effectiveness of political institutions. Investigating their collective impact, this study seeks to unveil the intricate dynamics that shape citizens' attitudes and behaviors toward democracy within a specific context or population group. By comprehensively analyzing these predictors, this research contributes to a deeper understanding of how diverse societies navigate their democratic journeys, how cultural and religious values intersect with political engagement, and how media and political institutions jointly influence citizens' trust and involvement. This multi-disciplinary approach offers valuable insights for policymakers and scholars, fostering the development of informed policies and inclusive democratic environments, thereby furthering the principles of democracy in a rapidly evolving global landscape.

Keywords: Cultural values, Democratic political culture, Media influence, Religious beliefs, Social diversity